From the Nature

So, what is “natural wine” anyway?— the term may be trendy, but the methods are actually ancient. As with any natural product, the term 'natural wine' simply indicates that nothing artificial has been added to the grape growing or winemaking processes. Natural wine making aims to express the essence of wine without interference and that is up to personal interpretation.

Humans have intervened with wine to impact every aspect. Everything in natural wine occurs organically, as such the fermented grape juice is produced with traditional practices, naturally occurring yeast, little to no filtration and little to no preservatives. This gives us wines with life, pure juices that can be quite similar or radically different to conventional winemaking.

This type of preparation suits the Tresind Studio ethos exactly, we hope you agree.
